- Majority of parents responded they are only moderately concerned about Bullying.
- Most parents are aware their children receive a program in school that teaches about bullying.
- Peer pressure and academic achievement are parent's biggest concerns for their children followed by bullying.
- Parents report that most kids don't talk about what they are learning in school about bullying.
- Parents would like to learn about new information for their children either online or by a flier from school.
- Most parents do not know what the Dignity for All Students Act is.
- If parents need to contact the school because of a concern with their child and another friend, they are satisfied enough on how the school handles the problem.
